Q What is the best choice currently for straightening teeth?

A The answer to this question relies solely on the expectations, dental health/history and medical health/history of the individual who is inquiring about straightening their teeth. There are many more choices today for achieving a beautiful smile than just 20 years ago. Many, if not most of the patients who come to my office for an evaluation receive several treatment options and they choose the one that is right for them at that time, whether it is full/limited braces, clear aligners, or a removable retainer to straighten minor crowding. Braces give us the most control but might not be the best option for everyone. If anyone is interested in improving their smile they should be evaluated by their local dental care provider.

Joseph M. Hathaway, Jr., M.D.

Q My husband always seems to have problems with gas and bloating, and severe pain. He will not see a doctor. Is there something that can be said to push him in the right direction?

A Although gas and bloating are common problems, there could be underlying issues that are causing his problems. If he has been on an Over the Counter medication for longer than a month, he needs to be seen by a physician. There are several medical conditions that if left untreated over time, can have serious consequences. In addition we also have medications that could potentially make his symptoms better.

Ask Dr. Hiller

Women's Health

Dr. James Hiller

How can you combat constant headaches and fatigue during pregnancy?

Due to the hormonal changes in pregnancy, headaches and fatigue are very common. Elevated progesterone levels in the first trimester effect energy levels the most. Fortunately these fall quickly by 10 - 12 weeks. Headaches and fatigue can be eased with eating right, drinking plenty of fluids and trying to get plenty of uninterrupted sleep. Headaches can also be alleviated by not abruptly stopping caffeine intake (yes, some caffeine is safe). Avoid aspirin and OTC meds like naproxen and ibuprofen. Occasionally I will prescribe something for headaches but these must be taken sparingly as prolonged use can cause rebound headaches.

Land Surveying

James M. Anderson & Assoc.
Jim Anderson

What if I disagree with a survey that has been done by another company?

Surveyors do not establish property lines, people do, by their acceptance or rejection of the lines that are marked and claimed by adjacent landowners. Property title or ownership is a very complex subject. Property boundary disputes have been going on for centuries. If you do not agree with where a surveyor may mark your property line, I would first contact that surveyor, and ask them to explain the basis for where they marked the line. That explanation may clear up the problem. If after meeting with the surveyor who marked the line, you still have disagreement, you may want to consult another surveyor and ask his opinion. He will need all of your plats, and the neighbor's plats. There could still be some technical misunderstanding that your surveyor could better explain. If your surveyor agrees with you that there is a problem with where the first surveyor marked the line, I would suggest that all parties meet and try to resolve the problem, possibly with a compromise. If there is too much difference in the two solutions, it may be time for you and your surveyor to consult an attorney.
